The same color effect was carried out in the refreshments. Mrs. Peterson was assisted in serving by Mrs. Luke Cosgrove.

MAKING A VOLCANO COOK.

(Harpur's Weekly.)

At the very edge of the great crater of the volcano of Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, about two hundred miles from Honolulu, is located one of the most novel ranches in the world. Its owner is an American, and he is making a profitable business from the sordid occupation of raising swine, but the remarkable feature in the farming operations is the manner of feeding the stock.

Covering the slopes of this crater mountain and entirely surrounding the ranch is a dense forest of fifty feet, with wonderful feathery foliage and stems frequently a foot or more in diameter. The hard, a greater part of whose trunk incloses a fibrous mass, consisting principally of a pulp rich in starches and sugars. Experiments demonstrated that after thoroughly steaming or cooking this pulp it becomes soft, and is greedily eaten by the hogs, but the method of preparing the food is of expensive for practical purposes. However, the natural resources of Hawaii solved the problem.

The hardened lava coating, which extends for a considerable distance on every side of the active central pit of the volcano, is cracked in many places, allowing steam to escape continually. Yankee ingenuity recognized the value of these phenomena and above several of the fissures griddons were erected at cordwood lengths of fern trunks piled upon them. The effectiveness of this primitive steam cooker was immediately apparent, and in the course of one or two days the toughest fern became tender under this treatment. A single stroke with an ax then sufficed to split open each stem and laid bare the nutritious pulp, which the swine eagerly devoured.

DIETING ON DEADLY DRUGS.

(Pearson's Weekly.)

Arsenic eating is indulged in in England today to a considerable extent. There are dainty dances in west end mansions who swallow the poison in profusion. So, too, do the foreign-born. East London artificial flower makers: the object in these cases being the same, namely, the beautifying of the complexion.

Very minute quantities of the drug, taken daily for long periods, give to the skin a dazzling purity and delicacy of coloring obtainable in no other way. Even a coarse, blotchy face is transmuted and beautified by it.

The girls and women in the factories—mostly aliens—are fully aware of these facts, and not only make use of the poison themselves for that purpose, but smuggle it outside, and give or sell it to their friends and acquaintances. Not long since a Polish Jewess was prosecuted for this at a London police court, when it transpired that she had for years been a victim to the arsenic habit, her average daily dose being half a grain. Her system, the police surgeon explained, had undoubtedly become injured to the effects of the poison, since such a quantity introduced daily into the system of an unimpaired person would very quickly be followed by serious symptoms and probably by death.

In Optum, in the form of Laudanum, is largely used in the factory districts of the north and in certain of the southern agricultural counties. Laudanum is a poison, scheduled in the pharmacy act, and is also an ordinary article of commerce, and there is, therefore, nothing to prevent a chemist from selling any quantity of it to any person requiring anything like a plausible explanation of the purpose for which he requires it. Some victims of the habit will consume as much as three ounces daily; yet a single drachm has been known to cause death.

Either drinking is common among the natives of Connemara; who also are in the habit upon occasion of dosing themselves with tartar emetic, probably the most loathsome of all toxic drugs. This they do under the impression that it is a preventive of some say cure for consumption.

REWARD FOR HONESTY.

(Cleveland Press.)

One day last week a teacher in Bolton school picked up in the street a chamolix bag, and, peering inside, saw some diamonds. Advertisements telling of the loss of $2,000 worth of diamonds led the school teacher to the residence of the owner, the wife of a down town merchant. Incidentally a reward was offered, but the woman who found them is of character too high to make a reward a thing to be considered in such a case. She carried the diamonds to the woman who had lost them, and the latter seized them with joy that a woman could possibly show on the recovery of her jewels.

"And now," said the woman, "you shall have a reward of $80 if you like it out in trade in my husband's shop." The school teacher's sense of humor prevented her from showing any emotion, and she told the owner that she could not think of taking a reward for common honesty and was only too glad to find the owner. During the conversation the woman was counting the diamonds, and she suddenly broke out with:

"One of them is missing. One of them is missing. What are you going to do about that?"

"Oh, yes, I can do about that," replied the school teacher, "is to wish that more were missing. Good day."

TALE OF A THIRTY SCOT.

(Cleveland Leader.)

Alexander Wright, brother of the county auditor, who is visiting Cleveland for a vacation period, and who is in the public service with his Scottish home, tells this tale about a man named McGregor, a thirty man in a land of thrift, who was seen in Glasgow wearing a lustrous sparkler in his cravat. To him said Sandy McDermott: "Who g'n ye the d'emon, McGregor?"

"Nobbut myself," was the answer. "Ye've been trating yerself, eh?"

"No that, either," McGregor made reply. "I'm excoeteror of the estate of Sammis McDougall."

"An' ye hae yer han's in the pile the no?"

"Tush, mon," said McGregor, looking hurt. "Tis a' i' th' will. First, it said, his lawfu' debts were to be paid, which was unnecessary under the law. Then, it said, th' excoeteror was to set aside thirty-p' cent for th' buryin'. D'ye mind?"

"Oh, aye," responded McDermott. "An' then he wished th' excoeteror to procure as handsome a stone as could be had in Glasgow for a mather o' seventy buns."

"Aweel, mon," concluded McGregor, "this is the stone."

PHONETICS AT FAULT.

(St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

Appropos of examination time, Professor Carl C. Peterson of Dubuque related at a recent dinner some examination stories. "Once," in a Bible lesson, he said, "I repeated the text, 'Arise and take the young child and his mother and flee into Egypt.' And then I showed the children a large picture that illustrated the text in bright colors."

"The children studied this picture eagerly. Then they all frowned; all looked rather disappointed. Finally a little girl said:

"Teacher, where is the flea?"

Diamonds

Did it ever occur to you that a good diamond is like a good corner lot and that the owner of either will sell only at a fair profit?

And did it ever occur to you that a big diamond at a low price has something wrong with it and is sold cheap for the same reason that a corner lot with a slaughter house option next door (that you don't know about) is sold cheap?

In either case you get just what you pay for—the usual "bargain" in one instance and a good asset in the other.

If you can afford a diamond at all, buy one that is just right and it will be brilliant; but if it lacks brilliancy it lacks everything that gives it character, and one had better wear glass and put his money out at interest.

Our diamonds are worth while.
